

Do exotic pets need an apartment?

Exotic pets can be beautiful, unique, and some can be trained to do tricks, talk, or retrieve items for you. Generally, pets that require a large enclosure and outside-of-cage time like parrots need a space more extensive than a small apartment for free-flying.

What animals do not need a large enclosure?

Lizard species that are good for beginners include leopard geckos, crested geckos, house geckos, bearded dragons, and anoles. Snake species that do not require large enclosures include corn snakes, king snakes, milk snakes, and ball pythons. Hedgehogs do not need a vast cage; a good size for an enclosure is at least 2 feet by 3 feet.

Can you keep a pet in a storage unit?

It's hard for most of us to envision keeping a more mobile, vocal pet like a dog or cat in a storage unit, but this also includes smaller animals in tanks and cages. Most animals in those categories need regular care and feeding, a light source, and fresh air, so please find a more safe and humane place for these animals.

Can you keep a bear as a pet?

Bears used to be owned as pets by a range of colleges who used them as live mascots. Today, you usually need a permit. Llamas and alpacas are popular pets on hobby farms. Monkeys are regulated in most states, but capuchin monkeys can also be kept as support animals in some situations.

Can you keep a snake as a pet?

Snakes are a common pet, so there's a lot of good infrastructure for keeping and caring for snake pets. Tarantulas are some of the most common exotic pets in the USA. Cougars, like tigers, are highly regulated in most jurisdictions. Some states, however, do allow you to own them with permits.

What animals can be a good exotic pet?

Add some exotic excitement to your aquarium with a saltwater sea animal like an octopus. Just make sure your tank is of adequate size and can replicate their usual habitat with tons of live rock, sand and a fluorescent light. 7.
